We are pleased to be an information source for scleroderma patients. We understand that the disease can be challenging to live with, and our website is a comprehensive and accessible resource for anyone who needs to better understand scleroderma.

However, we wish to emphasize that our team is based in Quebec, Canada, and primarily focuses on Quebec and Canadian patients, treatments available in Canada, and research advancements in our country, particularly in the province of Quebec. While we can provide very interesting and up-to-date general information on scleroderma, we are unable to comment on healthcares provided to patients in Canada or other countries.

We are happy to provide online resources such as educational fact sheets and information videos on scleroderma, as well as patient forums open to everyone. However, unfortunately, we are unable to include patients living abroad in our virtual or in-person meetings. We do not have the necessary resources to do so, and our volunteers and staff members are not healthcare professionals who can intervene in healthcare provided to patients in our region, let alone those in other countries.

Nonetheless, we are committed to providing the most relevant and up-to-date information in support of all patients living with scleroderma, regardless of their location. We hope that our site will be a useful source of information for you. If you have specific questions about healthcare in your country, we encourage you to contact healthcare professionals and local scleroderma associations for more detailed information.

We trust that you will find our website helpful in better understanding your disease and finding relevant information to aid you on your healthcare journey.
